Reagan Lists Aims At Talks

But Agreement On Chemical Arms Is Denied

By Bernard Weinraub

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan has proposed "the broadest people-to-people ex-changes in the history of American-Soviet relations."

Mr. Reagan, who was to embark Saturday for Geneva, said Thurs-day that his meetings there Tues-day and Wednesday with Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the Soviet leader, could be "a historic opportunity to set a steady, more constructive course in the 21st century." Meanwhile, Larry Speakes, the White House spokesman, said Thursday that there would be no agreement in Geneva on balting the spread of chemical weapons, con-trary to reports Wednesday by adistration officials.

The officials had said that the two countries were planning to combine efforts to stop the spread of chemical weapons, although de-tails on how to implement the ac-cord had not been worked out. They said the issue was to be in-cluded in one of several arms con-

Colombia: Miracle at Sunrise Survivor Tells of Desperate Race Against Mudslide

BOGOTA — Swept away by a torrent of mud, with houses crum-bling about him, José Martinez was one of the lucky few from the devastated Colombian town of Ar-mero who lived to see the sunrise after the volcanic emption.

"It was a miracle," said Mr. Martinez, 49, a truck driver, from his hospital bed in Bogotá on Friday. For those of us who survived, me and my family, it was a miracle."

At least 20,000 people died when the Nevada de Ruiz volcano erupted in one of the worst volcanic disasters of this century, unleashing a river of mud, rocks and water that engulfed Armero.

Relief workers said that perhaps only 2,500 Armero residents had escaped death. Twenty-five survivors arrived in Bogota by bus on Friday and 50 more, all children. were expected.

Mr. Martinez, his battered body bearing the marks of his ordeal, slowly moved his broken left arm to show how he reached for debris as the mud swept him away. "I saw houses crumble, cars and

Death Toll Of 20,000 (Is Expected In Colombia

ARMERO, Colombia - The Colombian Red Cross said Friday that it estimated the nation's volcano death toll to be at least 20,000, as rescue workers dug nonstop to save people buried by the wave of mud that swept over Armero and three other Andean towns before dawn Thursday.

A dark column of steam and ash rose above the Nevada de Ruiz volcano Friday as rescuers dug numbed survivors from a sea of mud and a fleet of helicopters shuttled them away from Armero.

Thousands of survivors spent a second night Thursday in the open without nourishment.

Many of those rescued from the torrents of blazing ash and mud complained bitterly that local officials had failed to warn them of the danger and had even discouraged them from evacuating when the volcano began spitting ash Wednesday afternoon.

The volcano, after months of rumbling, erupted with a deafening roar shortly after 10 P.M. Wednesday, residents said, and about three hours later the mud avalanche rushed through Armero and three other towns. There were reports of a second eruption as well.

Simultaneous heavy rains engorged the Lagunilla River before dawn Thursday, turning it into a rushing wall of mud that destroyed at least 85 percent of Armero, a coffee-farming town of 50,000 peo-ple situated 30 miles (48 kilometers) from the volcano and 105 miles northwest of Bogotá, the Colombian capital.

Another 20,000 people lived in nearby Santuario, Carmelo and Pindalito, towns that also were buried by the mud.

The United Nations Disaster Relief Organization and the U.S. Embassy in Bogota said that 4,000 bodies had been recovered by Friday morning, and death toll estimates by government officials ranged beyond 25,000.

From the air on Friday, fewer than a hundred buildings could be seen jutting from a milewide river of mud. Before the eruption, a consus showed the town had 4,200 buildings.

A church, the tallest building in Armero, was leveled by the mud. But the local cemetery, protected by a high cement wall, was untouched, saving residents who huddled there. Other survivors climbed trees and jumped onto roofs. Some inched on their stomachs the sea of mud covering the town. Colombia's president, Belisario Betancur, who put himself in charge of rescue operations, spent most of Thursday flying over the devastated area in a helicopter. In a television interview Thursday night, he described the ravages of the volcano as an "immeasurable tragedy."

"We have had one tragedy after another," Mr. Betancur said.

The disaster occurred one week after a 28-hour siege by leftist re-bels at the Justice Ministry in Bogotá, in which about 100 people, including 11 of the country's 24 Supreme Court justices, were killed. Mr. Betancur had refused to negotiate with the rebels and broke the siege with repeated assaults by armored cars and troops with beavy weapons and explosives.

Tremors were felt Friday near the volcano and steam still poured from the crater, stirring fears of new eruption. But the Colombian Geophysical Institute said it detected only light seismological ac-

The United States was sending 12 helicopters, tents, blankets and medical supplies from U.S military bases in Panama. Mexico sent 10 tons of food, medicine and medical equipment. Japan announced it was sending an eight-member medical team.

An estimated 2,000 people still were trapped on a ranch near Guayabal four miles from Armero. Hundreds of bodies were being taken to a soccer stadium in Guayabal.

The eruption was the deadliest since New Guinea's Mount Lamington exploded in 1951, killing from 3,000 to 5,000 people, United Press International reported.

will continue through Sunday. The moon is new and thus not a source of much interfering light. The comet will be fairly high above the eastern horizon and near an easily recognizable feature in the sky, the cluster of stars astrono-

However, in March and April, on the comet's return swing, the Southern Hemisphere will get by far the best view of the comet in its most spectacular phase.

Most comet experts recommend binoculars, rather than a telescope, for viewing the comet. They suggest 7x35 or, preferably, 7x50 binocusee the comet began Thursday and lars. Binoculars provide a wider field of view than telescopes, which is an advantage especially in nighta when the comet's tail stretches across the sky.

Visibility will depend on weather and proximity to city lights. The sky must be clear and dark. People in cities and most suburbs will have little or no chance to see the comet.

These are among the impressions of the United States that Mr. Gorbachev has presented in conversations with U.S. officials and politi-cians since becoming Soviet leader in March, according to Western diplomats who have been briefed in detail about the meetings.

The diplomats said Mr. Gorba-

Joseph D. Douglass wrote, "The Soviet objective is to destroy capi-talism and replace it everywhere with their brand of socialism."

"We have read this book and watched all its programs become adopted by the Reagan administra-tion," Mr. Gorbachev told Mr. Shultz, citing that as confirmation that "right-wing forces" control American policy, a diplomat said.

The diplomats said Mr. Gorbachev, who was more combative and argumentative than he had been in vious meetings with Americans, challenged almost every statement made by Mr. Shultz about the United States piction of the United States as a source of military hardware and other aid to the Soviet Union in World War II.

The diplomats said that when Mr. Shultz recalled that support within Congress for the strategic arms limitation treaty of 1979 died after the Russians sent troops into Afghanistan that year, Mr. Gorbachev responded, "It shows you don't take us very seriously when you make a remark like that."

Mr. Gorbachev then contended that long before the Russians went into Afghanistan, the treaty, which was signed by President Jimmy Carter and Leonid L Brezhnev, had been undermined by "right-wing forces."

Rear What? Dewey Would Have Laughed

When the navy, in 1980, revived the one-star rank of com-modore, which had not been used since World War II, the rank was given the designation "commodore admiral."

But Representative Ike Sketton, a Missouri Democrat, got the designation changed to plain "commodore." As he said, "If it was good enough for such great men of the sea as Perry, Decatur and Dewey, then I felt it was good enough for today."

The navy didn't, and a three-year fight ensued. One high-ranking officer said: "You've got officers who have been working all their professional lives to become admiral, and they get called a commodore. It became a very emotional issue." After all, brigadiers in the army, air force and marine corps are called brigadier general.

While welcoming the clemency, both prisoners and opposition activists are calling the proceedings a disappointing retreat by the gov-ernment of President Wojciech Jaruzelski from its seeming offer last month of a formal amnesty following the election and installation of a new parliament.

This measure will not help the situation much, because the promises were much greater," said Mr. Kofman, who was imprisoned five months and had been awaiting trial on charges of printing and distrib-uting Krytyka. This is not a real amnesty. Society expected much Opposition leaders argue that even a broad amnesty program is unlikely to have a lasting political benefit in Poland.

"What people are fighting for," said Zbigniew Romaszewski, a Solidarity human rights activist, "is not amnesty but political rights like freedom of expression and freedom of trade unions. And as long as those rights don't exist, people will be in prison. They can empty the jails but they'll be full again a year from now. It's a vicious circle."

General Jaruzelski first mentioned the possibility of an amnesty during a visit to the United Nations in early October, saying it would depend on public support for the Oct. 13 elections to the Sejm, Poland's parliament. Government spokesmen later called the elections a success and said that an amnesty measure could be submitted to the Sejm, which is required to approve such measures. It conditioned the move by saying that the "compassionate mitigations" were "not expected to cover" persons who had been arrested previously or who benefited from amnesties in

The report said that 1,600 people now were on death rows.

The researchers found that efforts of defense attorneys in appeal courts led the way in uncovering evidence to correct erroneous convictions, with 147 such cases. South Africa froze nearly all foreign loan repayments in late August when its currency, the rand, tumbled to record lows after foreign banks called in loans rather than renew them routinely. That meant about $14 billion of South Africa's $24 billion foreign debt was due within a year, far beyond the country's ability to repay the The crisis resulted from foreign bankers' doubts about South Africa's long-term political stability in the face of sustained anti-apartheid violence that has left more than 800 people dead in 15 months.

In Soweto, the huge black town-ship near Johannesburg, officials dismissed hundreds of striking workers at Baragwanath Hospital when they refused to end a strike and return to work, said Hennie van Wyk, director of hospital services in Transvaal province.

Dr. van Wyk refused to say how many strikers were dismissed, only saying it was "less than 1,000.

The hospital, with a total staff of nearly 10,000 people, is the primary provider of medical care in Soweto. In Cape Town, news reports said that Trevor Manuel, a senior member of the United Democratic Front, South Africa's biggest multiracial anti-apartheid organization, was served with a government order barring him from attending public gatherings for five years. Mr. Manuel is in detention without charge under security laws.

Thursday that the banks were eager for genuine political reform in South Africa in return for an agreement on rescheduling the loans.

He said in an interview on Swiss television that he believed South Africa had made "astonishing" progress in changing its racial policies over the past six years, but added, "I wonder how anyone can sell his policies worse than the South African government." Mr. Leutwiler also called newrestrictions on the media "the most" stupid thing the government could have done.

The impact of those restrictions, which ban pictorial coverage of unrest and severely limit print coverage, were clearly felt Thursday when the police arrested 718 strik is ers at the Soweto hospital. A police officer declared the conflict and "unrest situation" and ordered all reporters to leave the hospital.

Print journalists had to cover the clash by telephone, while television networks, whose crews are antomatically banned from unrest situations, said that without actions shots they had abandoned attempts? to cover the incident.

Peres Ends Cabinet Crisis, Accepts Sharon's Apology

For his part, Mr. Shamir reiterated his position that, under the September 1984 coalition agreement that led to the national unity government, the prime minister can dismiss a minister from the opposite faction only with the approval of the alternate prime minister. Despite the impasse on the question of the prime minister's authority to dismiss cabinet members, the crisis over the Peres-Sharon fend appeared to have subsided, at least for the time being.

But, although both sides vowed publicly to try to maintain the coalition government until Mr. Peres and Mr. Shamir are scheduled to rotate positions next September, sources in both the Likud and Labor factions expressed fears that another attack by Mr. Sharon against Mr. Peres's foreign policy would bring down the government, which took office 14 months ago.

They said that any moves by Mr. Peres in the peace process that hint likely to trigger a new outburst by Mr. Sharon, leading to his dismiss-al and a walkout by the Likud bloc.

Predicting that the days of the coalition government are numbered, the absorption minister, Yaacov Tsur, of the Labor Party, said, "After this, it will only be a time out."

The minister of economic planming, Gad Yazcobi, said he hoped that "lessons had been studied" by Mr. Sharon and other ministers But, he warned, "If such phenoinenon will happen again in the fore-seeable future, the prime minister will fire any minister who acts the way Mr. Sharon acted, without any negotiations or any effort to appease anybody."

Mr. Sharon, who flew to New York for a fund-raising tour after his confrontation with Mr. Peres, appeared to be the principal loser in the brief cabinet crisis.

Lahar: Volcano's Devastating Mud Slide

By Walter Sullivan New York Times Service

SAN FRANCISCO - The mud slides during the volcanic eruption in northern Colombia appear to be a classic example of what geologists call a lahar, a devastatingly fast and huge avalanche of mud. Scientists said the slides probably were touched off when heat from the eruption of the Nevada del Ruiz volcano melted the mountain's covering of accumulated snow and ice. Lahars have been known to race down mountainsides at speeds as pressure at a depth of about 60 high as 60 mph (about 100 kph), miles, molten rock, or magma, sweeping away everything in their paths.

Come to Colombia's Aid

over the dozens who died in last week's siege at the Palace of Justice in Bogota must now dig for thousands of bodies buried in mud. For months there have been warning puffs from Nevado del Ruiz, the northernmost Andean volcano. But life continued as before in Armero and three other towns lying below with 2 total population of 70,000. That was surely understandable; the volcano last erupted in 1595, and its periodic huffing over the years provoked not terror but shrugs. Wednesday night, Nevado del Ruiz awoke. Heavy rains turned ash to mud. The flames in its cone could be seen from airliners trying to escape its smoke high over Bogota, 160 kilometers (100 miles) to the south. The outcome was summarized by a Red Cross worker: "Armero doesn't exist anymore," he said of a city

Weep for Colombia. A country still grieving of 50,000 engulfed by mud. There may turn our the dozens who died in last week's siege at our to be 20,000 dead, in a country of 28 million. Compare that with the toll of Mexico's killer earthquake, which may have killed as many as 7,000 in a country of 75 million.

Fresh grief comes at a cruel time. President Belisario Betancur has defended democracy by trying to negotiate fairly with guerrilla groups and standing against the corrupting traffic in cocaine. His hopes for social peace were frustrated when M-19 guerrillas ended a truce and seized the Palace of Justice. Now human tragedy is compounded by natural disaster.

There is no doubt that the United States will open its heart and extend its hand to Colombia, as it did to Mexico after the earthquake. The only consolation in Colombia's grief is that it can turn strangers into neighbors. -THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Tending Currency Rates

There is little dispute that the U.S. dollar is too high and other currencies are too low, and it is common to blame the system of freefloating exchange rates. But nobody agrees on what, if anything, might work better. A conference in Washington this week has helped put things into focus. Perfection may be out of reach, but ways exist to improve the system.

The conference dealt in monetary abstractions, but its roots were profoundly political. Currency values effect exports and imports and thus growth. Growth is how political leaders stay in office, and they are not good at retarding it for some larger common interest. The conference was convened by Senator Bill Bradley, Democrat of New Jersey, and Representative Jack Kemp, Republican of New York. They come at the problem from different directions but they agree there is a prob-lem. The Reagan administration did not agree until lately, but Treasury Secretary James Baker now shows a welcome new openness.

The clearest evidence of trouble is the immense U.S. trade deficit and the huge increase in foreign investment in America. With American goods now priced high and foreign goods low, imports have surged and exports lagged. This has cut economic growth at home, inflamed pressure for trade barriers and put America deeply in debt to foreigners. On the positive side, the boom in imports stimulates other countries' economies, and foreign invest-ment helps finance the budget deficit.

It is widely assumed that this situation will not last. Countries cannot run large trade deficits indefinitely; one day, foreigners will decide that they do not want so many dollars.

When they reduce their holdings the dollar's value will drop. If it drops too far or too fast, the world faces a whole new set of distortions. Everyone wants to avoid that; hence the exploration for a more disciplined system.

Until 12 years ago currencies had a fixed relationship to the dollar, and the dollar was pegged to a fixed price for gold. Fixed rates presume that governments adjust fiscal and monetary policies if their currencies get out of line. This system was finally overwhelmed by the growth of international trade and capital flows. In 1973, currencies were freed to float, Representative Kemp wants to return to some form of rate fixing. Senator Bradley leans toward more flexible controls. There is increased talk of setting "target zones," in which there would be an agreement on exchange rates from which currencies would be allowed to vary by no more than, say, 10 percent. The big five Western nations agreed in September to seek better alignment of their currencies. But they did not declare targets or reveal commitments to correct domestic policies. The most notable distortion of currency values comes from the U.S. budget deficits, but other countries' policies are faulty, too.

No sovereign government willingly alters domestic policy under foreign pressure. A perfeetly harmonious currency system is thus blocked by the political pressures felt by leaders of individual countries. But even sovereigns can recognize a common good. The September accord and this week's brainstormi move in the right direction. Harmony need not be perfect to avert a plunge.

- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Other Opinion

Arms Stay on Sale to Debtors

Few belt-tightening proposals for debt-ridden countries call for reductions in military spending, yet heavy military spending is a major element in the economic distress of the developing world. Peruvian President Alan Garcia Pérez caught the world's eye when he "capped" interest payments on his country's debt. A similar cap on the purchase of fighter planes ordered by Peru attracted less attention, illustrating one aspect of the current debt crisis that has been overlooked.

Arms imports expand external debt, increase budget deficits and divert resources from investment in farming, manufacturing or health care. Until debtors and creditors recognize the link between military spending and mounting external debt, lasting solutions to chronic debt will prove elusive. From 1972 to 1982, military spending by developing countries rose to more than $165 billion, doubling in real terms. Meanwhile, the external debt of these nations soared from less than $300 bilhion to over $750 billion. High spenders on military goods — Sudan, Mauritania, Peru and Vietnam - have been among the first to become delinquent in servicing their debts.

Many countries now use more than 20 percent of export income just to pay interest on their debt. Some use over 50 percent. Large arms outlays have helped push the debt-service ratio of some Third World countries to the point where outright default has become likely. Egypt and Argentina are prime examples.

Because military spending diverts scarce resources from productive activities, economic growth is slowed. Cutting back on military spending in developing nations could do far more to enhance economic development than any other sacrifice now proposed. While a new jet fighter may provide the illusion of security to governments in an unstable world, it cannot quell the instability of poverty.

— Jodi Jacobson, writing in the United Nations publication Development Forum.

Scrambling for 'Aid' Projects

When governments use public money to help their companies win big contracts in poorer countries, they not only undermine commercial discipline and budgetary prudence; they can pervert the very purpose of development aid. In recent months, commercial competition for scarce project work has become increasingly intense. So has the competition between governments, in effect, to buy export business with injections of "aid." The U.S. administration has long campaigned against such subsidies - for subsidies they are. Now, in an apparent effort to expose the practice for what it is, the Export-Import Bank in Washington has named six overseas projects, including a metro for Algiers, where it says it will match and beat on behalf of American companies anybody who tries to win or ders by offering concessionary credit terms.

The OECD countries already have an agreement which is supposed to prevent the most flagrant undercutting by rival governments. It stipulates that if soft finance is offered, at least a quarter of the total credit must be in the form of aid. The idea is to prevent governments from chipping in sweeteners here and there in order to win closely fought commercial con-tests. In the light of recent developments, that stipulation is clearly inadequate.

A Diplomatic Role for Israel

The Soviet Union has apparently decided it can increase its clout in the Middle East by improving relations with Israel. Other countries, however, have more acceptable reasons for helping to end Israel's isolation. The United States will directly benefit as Israel plays a greater diplomatic role around the world. Israel and America share the same democratic values. As Israeli viewpoints gain respect, so, too, must those of the United States.

Stumbling Toward a Meeting of Opposites in Geneva least one thing in common on their way to Geneva: Together they have demonstrated to the world how not to settle differences between sovereign nations.

They have confused propaganda with diplomacy. Before they have even met in the first U.S.-Soviet summit conference in six years, they have turned the problem of the control of nuclear weapons over to their hucksters and allowed the latter to concentrate on the things that divide Washington and Moscow.

These two men have by accident inherited a world of apocalyptic weapons, one in which military spending exceeds $700 billion while people still go hungry. It is a world that includes six or seven nuclear weapons states and at least 20 more that are on the threshold, with bands of terrorists poised on the side.

It was the hope of most nations that when the two leaders got together they would, in their matual interest, be talking about the military and economic chaos of the world. Those nations had good reason for hoping so.

The United States and the Soviet Union are among the five permanent Security Council members of the United Nations that are treaty-bound to "settle their international disputes by peaceful means" and "to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state." Both countries also agreed that if they were permitted to hold nuclear weapons, they would work together to prevent the spread of such weapons to other nations or factions. Mr. Reagan insisted, quite fairly, that these were proper issues for discussion with Mr. Gorbachev, but

Mr. Gorbachev refused, insisting that the control of nuclear weapons must rest on the abolition of Mr. Reagan's "star wars" defense program. On this narrow issue, propaganda took over from diplomacy, forgetting all else. Mr. Gorbachev went to Paris to argue his case in the hope of dividing the United States from its

WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan and General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev have at as if that would make any difference even if they heard him. Just before Geneva the Pentagon comes forward with a report on Soviet violations of past treaty commitments, as if it were trying to sabotage the Geneva talks.

For years the president has been reluctant to talk about anything with the Russians. Then he decided he was eager to talk to Mr. Gorbachev about everything. Then, after Mr. Gorbachev agreed to talk only about scrubbing "Star wars," the word from the White House was that maybe they could not agree on anything.

In fairness, the Reagan administration is trying to get its folks together on the difference between researching and testing "star wars," in the hope of leaving Geneva with at least some kind of compromise. Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, who has climbed a few summits in his time, has come up with a few sensible suggestions about this Geneva meeting. His view is that the higher these clumsy giants climb, the harder they are likely to fall, unless they trust their aides to prepare the way to the dizzy heights.

Mr. Kissinger worries that Mr. Reagan and Mr.

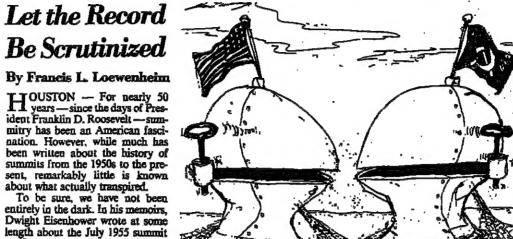

Gorbachev will try to negotiate seriously about the intricate and dangerous controls of nuclear weapons before they know what they are talking about. He is also concerned that the American media will turn the summit conference into a kind of superbowl sporting exercise, at the end of which the fancy guys of the press and television will analyze who won and who lost.

"Whereas," said Mr. Kissinger, "the real success of a summit can only be that neither side wins. Because, in a world of sovereign states, you can't have any permanent victories short of military victory. There are no permanent victories in diplomacy without some kind of com-promise of benefit to both sides." That is not the known view of either President Reagan or General Secretary Gorbachev as they approach the summit talks, but there is still a chance. They have been so clumsy and so stupid on the way that they can only do better once they get down to the facts.

A Chance to Dispel Mutual Ignorance

MANY Americans do not believe that their leaders can compete diplomatically with foreign leaders. As a senator from North Carolina once said on the floor of the Senate during a debate in the 1930s regarding membership on the World Court, What chance would we poor Americans have with some fellows there speaking five or six languages?"
What chance will poor Ronald Reagan have when the other fellow is so smart he speaks Russian? Observers become even more worried when they reflect on Mr. Reagan's legendary lack of interest in detail. Elaborate planning is taking place to limit the amount of time that he and Mikhail Gorbachev will be allowed to spend together alone.

But it is very difficult for the leader of either side to "give away the store." The Senate and the Politburo stand ready to ensure that this cannot happen. And a valuable feature of summits can be to provide superpower leaders with the education they should have received earlier. We can tolerate occasional missteps from U.S. or Soviet leaders at a summit. We cannot tolerate pervasive, continuing ignorance.

Blow the Whistle on Soviet Expansion

NO ONE with any knowledge of Russia would expect a new leader preparing for a party congress early next year to reach any agreement unless it were one in which the Soviets got everything they sought. This pessimistic view, however, should not blind Americans to the fact that the Geneva encounter offers President Reagan an unusual opportunity to raise with Mikhail Gorbachev the question of Russian military and political expansion. Mr. Gorbachev is deeply concerned with the perilous state of the Soviet economy. But his concern has not affected the global spread of Soviet military operations. We are watching the new Russian empire move into positions on three continents in which its political influence is based on military power. President Reagan is the man to blow the whistle. - Syndicated columnist Drew Middleton.

Think of Prisoners and Smashed Ribs

IN 1977 Sergei Khodorovich became manager of the Russian Social Fund, a Zurich-based charity founded in 1974 by Alexander Solzhenitsyn and funded by worldwide royalties from "The Gulag Archipelago." The fund does nothing other than support families of prisoners of conscience in the Soviet Union. Mr. Khodorovich was arrested in April 1983. In the years before his arrest he had been fired from his job, harassed in his home and provoked in the streets by KGB thugs disguised as thugs. In prison he was regularly beaten by persons gifted at leaving no visible traces on victims. His face was miniatked, but the rest of his body was almost entirely black and blue. Ribs were smashed. He received a "light" sentence of three years in a "strict regime" concentration camp-on the Arctic coast. That term is due to end next year. But, in a transparent trick to confuse foreign critics, the Kremlin has amended the criminal code to permit arbitrary extension of "light" prison terms. Vicious sentences are imposed piecemeal under a law concerning malicious insubordination to the demands of the administration of a corrective labor institutions. Your Andropov gave the Soviet Union two things — that law, and a protege named Mikhail Gorbachev.

Mr. Khodorovich's health is declining. His life may hang on Mr. Reagan's willingness to express, in Geneva, a special interest in him. As he does so, Mr. Reagan should see, cinematically, in his mind's eye, the methodical breaking of the prisoner's ribs.

Ulster: Is America Serious About Fighting Terror? LETTERS Variants of Terrorism

BELFAST — For a country that takes a lead in declaring "war on terrorism," the United States is being inconsistently reticent on extradition of Irish terrorists.

Authorities in Belfast will not be will give Dublin the right to take up grievances of the Catholic minority in Northern Ireland. The agreement does not go far, but both Catholic and Protestant militants are bitterly opposed to any concessions. Both sides know how to blow things up.
The United States and Britain have signed a supplement to their 1972 treaty to close the political defense loophole when extradition of murderers, bombers and hostage-takers is sought. There have been four hearings since the treaty was sent to the Senate for ratification last June. The Reagan administration has not exerted itself to get it through. The treaty is now begged down in fierce argument pressed by the Irish lobby. Opponents, with Senator Jesse Helms at the fore, want to reopen the loophole and let judges deny extradi-tion if they find "extraordinary cir-cumstances" behind the crime.

There have been four recent cases in which American courts have refused on political grounds to send back charged Irish terrorists, including one man who was convicted but escaped from prison and made it to America. The British want more assurance that they will be able to prosecute. When the shoe is on the other foot, as it was when Italy let Mohammed Abbas go after the Achille Lauro hijacking, Washington has no doubt that politics is no excuse for crime. Danny Morrison, a leader of what he calls "Sinn Fein stroke IRA," said the other day that his group planned "no special action beyond the current level" of violence in response to the London-Dublin agreement. "Our advantage," he said, "is to let it founder and expose the weakness of constitutional republicanism" — that is, of those who argue for a political solution instead of "armed struggle."

The Sinn Fein office, on Falls Road, is a shabby warren with an iron cage protecting its door. A poster says "The IRA calls the shots." A sinister mural of men in camouflage with automatics extols "Guerrilla days in Ireland." The Irish Times's Washington correspondent called it "McCarthyism" to suggest that opposing the British treaty showed support for the IRA.

This Extradition Treaty Is an Occasion

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Senate has a tremendous opportunity to strike a blow against international terrorism by ratifying the U.S. British extradition treaty. Surprisingly, the Senate may refuse to do so. Yet the opportunities embodied in the accord, which is now before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, are clear. Above all, it would deny furtifives accused or conwould deny fugitives accused or convicted of certain serious crimes the ability to avoid extradition from the United States on the ground that their offenses were "political."

Ratification is on hold because a small but vocal group of Irish-Americans has tried to turn the debate into a referendum on support for the IRA.
Without ratification, America will be a safe haven for IRA terrorists. Ratithose accused of the most serious offenses, including aircraft hijackings and sabotage, crime against diplomats, hostage-taking, murder and the use of firearms and explosives.

in recent years, four terrorist fugi-tives from British justice have escaped to freedom in the United States, and many more are likely to do so if this loophole remains open. All four cases involved members of each of these offenses as "political" and refused extradition. Much of the current debate focuses the IRA who were convicted of or sought for murder or attempted murder. Three of those four cases involved the death or injury of innocent civilians. Yet under the present extradition treaty, U.S. courts classified

By Larry Pressler The writer, a Republican senator from South Dakota, is chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee's subcommittee on European affairs.

This dangerous diversion must be stopped. The real issue is terrorism.

The treaty, signed last June by President Reagan, is consistent with recent government policy. Since 1981 the United States has signed, and Congress has ratified, extradition treaties with Mexico, Colombia and the Netherlands. None of those ratifications provoked protest, Each treaty allows the executive branch, not the courts, to determine whether a political-offense exception is necessary.

Such treaties offer three advantages: First, a political-offense exception to extradition is reserved for un-usual cases, ensuring flexibility to safeguard individual rights. Second, terrorists are clearly warned that routerrousts are clearly warned that rou-tine political-offense exceptions will not be granted, strengthening the de-terrent against such incidents. Third, mutual cooperation among Western governments in the battle against ter-liefs. America's time-honored policy

The proposed U.S.-British treaty is consistent with the European Convention on the Suppression of Terror-ism adopted in 1976. This summit comes in a year of remembrances for us all. Earlier in 1985, we commemorated the end of the costliest war this world has ever known. The greatest pain in both of our pasts.

We recalled Auschwitz and Birkenau. Treblinka. Dachau. Six million Jews, millions of others dead.

We have not forgotten the Nazi onslaught unleashed upon your people. In Leningrad, Stalingrad, civilians, military. 20 million dead.

Our shared sense of suffering from Nazi madness only compounds our sadness about the status of Jews in the Soviet Union today.

During your recent visit to Paris you said, "Nowhere in the entire world do Jews enjoy such extensive political obligations assumed by the and other rights as they do in Soviet government. the USSR."

Such a statement dims the light of hope flickering in Geneva this week. For anyone to distort the truth so brazenly about Soviet Jewry, makes any promise at the summit suspect.

The truth is stark. Soviet Jews have no rights. Their culture has been suppressed. Hebrew teachers and rabbis have been silenced. Synagogues shuttered up. Bibles and Talmuds have been confiscated in raids on apartments of Soviet Jews.

Jews asking to emigrate to Israel face the harshest treatment. Tens of thousands have been denied permission to go to their religious homeland. Refusals in violation of the Helsinki Final Act and many other international Refusniks are outcasts. Harassed. Persecuted. Jailed. We know this, Mr. Gorbachev, not from what we read in the press but because we were there. Because we spoke with Soviet Jews. Because we saw their condition with our own eyes in Moscow, Kiev and Leningrad.

Deprived of the right to cry out, they beseech the world, "Do not forsake us." These are humble, law abiding Soviet citizens. You know many of their names. Yet, Mr. Gorbachev, you say they have more freedom in Soviet Russia than in any other land in the world.

As you sit down with President Reagan, people around the world wonder, if you misrepresent the status of human beings in the USSR, how can we trust your word on the status of nuclear arms?

Or on anything?

Many have feared for some time that a crisis may be in the making. While there is a pressing demand for top-quality works, of which the Most professionals believed Christie's small group of paintings with historical connotations from the collection of Harris Whittemore, who died in 1927, would do well, while a larger group bought by a businessman, Juan Alvarez de Toledo, within the last five years would not fare so well because of the huge reserves. Sotheby's sale was seen as lackinstre and bound to run into difficulties.

But events took a very different turn, with Sotheby's winning hands down. Its sale Wednesday totaled $25.22 million (not counting premiums), with only 5.5 percent un-sold, while Christie's session Tuesday netted $17.75 million (not including premiums), with a 33-percent failure rate.

The Whittemore collection, of which nine works were auctioned Tuesday night at Christie's, was formed in the main between 1891 and 1918, at a time when the French artistic establishment treated Impressionism as a joke.

It hardly qualifies as a masterpiece, however.

Nor does "Meules au Soleil, Effet de Matin" which fetched $1.9 million (not counting premium), nor even the more attractive "Meule, Soleil dans la Brume," which Christie's gave a $1-million high estimate; no one expected it to go up to $2 million. The 28 lots from the collection of Juan Alvarez de Toledo, which followed, provided a striking anticli-max. The works were bought by the Argentinian shipping magnate as an investment, starting in 1980. Collectors consider with suspicion works that come back to the market so soon, particularly with a markup reflected in the "estimates." The most important lot, a beautiful still life painted by van Gogh a month $2.5 million to $2.75 million, re-Christie's president, who conductpeople in the world who were po-tential buyers of such a painting probably remembered the $2.2 mil-

In many cases, however, the estimates, reflecting outrageous re-serves, turned off buyers. Nearly haif of Alvarez's paintings and sculptures failed to seil. Others sold below estimate. One of the ughest Monet landscapes seen at anction in the last few years was knocked down at $600,000 despite Christie $ $700,000 to $900,000 estimate. Matisse's painting of a nude woman in an armchair, grossly overestimated at $450,000 to $550,000, was bought in at $320,000 and may be sold privately at about that price in the next few days.

In the sale of mixed properties that followed, there were no bids on the portrait of Madame Henriot by Renor; one eye is so badly done that the woman seems to have a glass eye. Mondrian's "Composition on Rouge, Bleu et Jaune," dat-ed 1930, is important, but is it worth more than $2 million? Those attending Tuesday, who may have remembered its auction appearance in 1983, decided it was not.

The contrast offered by Sotheby's sale Wednesday could not have been greater. The Albert J. Dreitzer collection, of no great distinction, got it off to a remarkable start. John Marion's skill as an auctioneer helped, but the enthusiasm generated by any painting that had the appearance of an Impressionist picture postcard left little doubt of the degree of intervention by a new clientele with only the merest acquaintance with art.

Renoir's portrait of a woman standing in a field with trees around and behind her is a borderline case at $950,000, well over Sotheby's high estimate of $750,000. But Pissarro's painting of a young peasant woman lying in the grass with a little girl is not. The price — $650,000, more than twice the high estimate of $300,000 — bears no relationship to the modest quality of the work.

The sale of mixed properties that followed may come to be remembered as a succession of world records for the artists' worst. For Renoir, one hesitates between the $320,000 offered for a painting of the painter's son Claude and two works in neo-18th-century style that look like a Renoir pastiche for a chocolate box. The pair was knocked down at a mind-bogging $450,000. One of the artist's best pictures in the sale, the portrait of a young woman wiping her feet, was sold for $1.5 million, compared with Sotheby's low estimate of

$1.75 million. The session speaks for Sotheby's! salesmanship, but hardly for the buyer's discrimination. It left somefamous dealers abnout speechless. "Incomprehensible," Klans Peris....

A STATE OF THE RESERVE OF THE RESERV

DARIS — The New York choreographer Karole
Armitage has developed a sizable following here since 1982, through performances of her works "GV 10," "Paradise," "The Last Gone Dance" and her warmly remembered (in local dance circles) duet with Michael Clark, "Drastic Classicism." But opening night for her latest piece, "The Watteau Duets," at the
sense of dissatisfaction. A STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE PAR sense of dissatisfaction.

Armitage, a veteran of the companies of George Balanchine and Merce Cunningham, described her choreography as "an uncouth rhythmic and sculptural approach to what ballet has always been." She explained, "Ballet is even and lyrical, its intention is decorative. In my pieces the rhythm is truncated and syncopated; the shapes are angular and asymmetrical.
There's a precariousness, a feeing of not knowing how the movements will be completed, or if they'll crack.

· (cc./g), ≥. In "The Watteau Duets," the composer, David Linton, applied a frankly violent approach to the classical tradition Armitage sees herself as extending. His composition was constructed of electronically sampled and altered extracts of works by Beethoven and Mozart, on which a rock rhythm was imposed, overlaid with improvised live drumming. "Part of my joy in the piece was to take 'high' sources and bring 25.000 them down to the most basic level," said Linton, a self-described outsider to the classical field.

Taken together, the music and dance - a variation on the pas de deux — suggested a desperate romance against the backdrop of a gnerrilla war. As it turned out, the guerrillas won: At the end Linton and his partner, Conrad Kinard, left their podium to stage a gladiator combat with amplified steel pipes, a develop-ment that did not noticeably amuse the audience, though it was plainly intended to do so.

As in Linton's solo concert at the same theater last fall, there was a strong element of punk humor in the "Duets." Armitage, not coincidentally, is an admirer of the now-disbanded Sex Pistols punk rock group. "It  * ~ 0 2002 portray the ambiguous erotic interactions, as often hostile as tender, of a man (danced by Joseph Lemon) and a woman. Armitage's intention, she said, was to bypass the "coquetry, fliring, and making oneself cute" of the classical pas de deux in favor of "variations on the theme of a contest of wills."

But on this evening, it was a contest without resolution. Even within sequences, the most explicitly erotic of Armitage's gestures (such as a suggestive lift or placement of a hand) were isolated from her partner's response. Armitage said technical problems before the opening had made the performers so tense that "there was no humor in the piece, only stress." One felt that stress, as a heaviness between Armitage and Lennon, even in comic quotations from swing dance styles in

At moments something powerful nevertheless emerged from the dialogue of Linton's tribal percussion and Armitage's idiosyncratic, stylized movements, drawn—or rather fused—from ballet, jazz and rock dance. Her fusion technique creates memorable images by playing on the viewer's expectations and against Linton's propulsive rhythms. A Michael Jack-son-like hip thrust, for example, took on a strikingly different line and tension when Armitage performed it on her toes. Charles Atlas's costumes - in particular an oddly flattering leather skirt worn by Lennon in one passage, and the naïve rainbow-colored costumes at the end - kept some humor in the dance, even on a

"Pop and high culture are equally valuable and beautiful when put to use on stage," Armitage said. "Image can be used from all our life and culture. That's not even an issue, it's a given." She acknowledged, however, that this stance was indeed an issue in New York in the late 1970s when she performed in punk rock clubs. "At first people were suspicious,' she id, "and then it became a style."

In Europe the integration of ballet and rock has come not from the bottom but from the top. Roland was incredible to see something that simple and powerful, that falling off-the-edge incertitude," she said, recalling the Sex Pistols.

Petit and Mannice Bejart have choreographed to artrock groups (End of Data and Tuxedomoon respectively). Fina Bausch, Jean-Claude Gallotta and Régine Chopinot deal in fusion choreography that demands that: "the viewer grapple with the images, get involved," as Armitage said of her work. The reaction in Paris to Armitage's "Duets," then, seemed to reflect MOSCOW — A Testival of Soviet jazz, "Autumn key themes, an at-times unnervingly cold aggressiveless incomprehension than appreciation of one of their

Renoir Museum: A Curator's Dream in the Making

By Mavis Guinard AGNES-SUR-MER, France — Children still play under the olive trees in Renoir's garden, but not for long, perhaps. Cagnes must come to mean Renoir, as Giverny now means Monet," said Georges Dussaule, who wants to revive the house Pierre-Auguste Renoir built here.

Dussaule curator of the house and of Cagnes's two museums, has many plans. He has already put the ancient fortress of the Château-Musée on the cultural map with a painting festival that attracts 30,000 visitors a year. His next project is to refurbish Renoir's farmbouse and recenture the atmosphere of the days when Renois and his friends lived there. First comes security. The hillside property that Renoir bought to save thousand-year-old olive trees from builders must be enclosed. Sophisticated devices must be in-stalled.

Then, Dussaule hopes, it will be possible to show six or seven major paintings of Renoir's Cagnes period. The Musée Chéret in nearby Nice has three. "La Ferme des Collettes," acquired with government and municipal funds for 900,000 francs (about $110,000), is at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts until Jan. 5 as part of this year's major Renoir exhibition.

Around the gardens, now a park, are scenes straight out of the landscapes Renoir painted there, framed by twisted olive trees. A child in a white bonnet plays with a ball, a visitor in a red blouse moves through the trees.

"We are lucky that Renoir never cared for a formal French garden," said Dussaule. "He wanted it as natural as possible, forbidding gardeners to weed the paths. He and his friends painted 'Les Collettes' from all angles. I just came across a

"The place needs to live again," Dussaule said.

The municipality of Cagnes and other well-wishers are supportive. "People keep stopping by to offer Paul Durand-Ruel and Ambroise mementos or paintings done by Re-Vollard. Photos show them dining noir's friends. They seem happy to on bent-wood chairs around the have somewhere to bring them, and I am eager to have them," Dussaule said. "We will need all the help we

Stricken with arthritis at the age of 54, Renoir was advised to go to the south of France in 1895. It may not have been the best prescription. "In winter the Mediterranean fogs roll in at night to make every bone ache," Dussaule said. "During the 10 winters Renoir spent in the house he had built in 1908, he must have suffered agonizing pain. Still, he was fortunate to take such joy in painting that it gave him a reason to live."

An immense canvas, "The Bathers," was rolled up on cylinders so is set into the dining-room fire-that the invalid could reach it more easily from his wheelchair. "I won't die until I finish it." Renoir said. feeling it summed up all he wanted Dussanle believes Renoir did his best paintings in this later period: clay, supervising and prodding the "Influenced by the light, the sea, the vegetation, they are charming and sensuous. I admit that at times his paintings of children can be a bit cloying. But here he worked faster — maybe because of the pain. Renoir would start daubing a small scene in a corner of the canvas "as a cianist would begin with scales." Later, these "miniatures" were cut out and framed. Renoir added his signature, for, despite his fame, he was a thrifty workman not averse to earning a few extra francs for his family.

When his hands felt more supple, he would dash off a few garden scenes in a day, or linger to brush the vibrant, healthy flesh tones of the Cagnes postman's daughter or other villagers.

His wife, Aline Charigot - once the model for the plump country girl in "La Danse a la Campagne" and the voluptuous "Blond Bather," done on a trip to Italy, bustled about

Maurice Cangnat, or dealers like Vollard. Photos show them dining dining table. As Renoir became emaciated, his wife grew immense, a regular earth goddess. She loved food and was a lavish provider. The stepped terraces were planted with citrus trees, grapes for wine, vegetables. The pink and red roses Renoir loved to paint clambered all over; a small Matisse landscape shows them invading the base of the Victorious Venus on the terrace.

In this lush atmosphere, Vollard suggested that Renoir try sculpture. Although he first "sent him to the devil," the painter tried a bust. then a medallion of Claude, which him, and trained sculptors, Richard Guino. Marcel Girnond, or Louis Morel, carried out the 24 works Renoir prepared in sketches or work along with his cane.

Besides some casts of these statues, the unfinished museum now shows only reproductions of Renoir paintings. They are tacked to wooden frames; Renoir used to file his away. "I touched up the sides myself with some dabs of color to make them seem less new." the curator said.

The property was saved a second time from the builders when the city of Cagnes bought it from Claude Renoir in 1960. "Other-wise, we might have some 'Resi-dences Renoir' instead of the olive groves today," Dussaule said.

There are still relics of Renoir. "Hardly anything had been moved since Aline died in 1915, Renoir in 1919. We even came across some gold coins tucked in the back of the desk." There was the gray tweed iacket Renoir wore, a ball-and-peg to exercise his hands, some favorite props, a battered straw hat with artificial flowers, Clo-Clo's faded clown costume.

The studio has been recreated: In front of the easel is the caneback wheelchair, a folding stool with nalente and housbes, a wooden paintbox and some crushed tubes

Most often, Renoir was carried on a portable chair, padded with many cushions, to whatever spot he fancied in the glorious morning Another daytime haunt was his

Outside, an eavesdropping garings, some hideous, some handsome like the pyramids along the Baie des Anges. "We can recapture the fore-ground: stilted planting must be eliminated, other plants brought back," Dussaule said. "I want to see the five bittersweet orange trees disappeared — where he sheltered from the mistral while his models posed in the sun.

NEW YORK - Prices on the New York Stock Exchange retreated Friday as investors, armed with gains from three record-setting sessions this week, took profits. The market maintained a through early afternoon with blue chips sup-ported by strong buying in International Busiess Machines Corp. and the auto sector. As bellwether IBM weakened, the Dow Jones industrial average fell back.

The Dow finished at 1,435.09, which was 4.13 below the record it set Thursday at 1,439.22. For the week the Dow jumped 30.73 points.

Broader market indicators fell. The New York Stock Exchange index lost 0.47 to 114.35. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index decreased 0.94 to 198.12. The price of an average share dropped 14 cents.

Declines outnumbered advances by a ratio of 2-1. Volume totaled 130.2 million shares, up from 124.9 million on Thursday.

"This was an opportunity to take profits," said Wayne Nordberg of Prescott Ball & Turben. Mr. Nordberg said that if interest rates did not decline further, the market would have nothing to propel it higher.

Investment houses are expecting stronger corporate profits in the first part of 1986, but Mr. Nordberg said he saw neither the economy nor corporate profits strengthening during that

The Labor Department reported that U.S. rholesale prices rose 0.9 percent in October and the Commerce Department said business inventories rose 0.2 percent in September. The Federal Reserve Board said industrial production was unchanged in October.

Michael Metz of Oppenheimer & Co. main-tained that the market would move still higher. He said, "You have a lot of excess money in the system that is not being used either for capital ending or to build inventories, so it's moving into the stock and bond markets instead."

Ford Motor Co. was the most active NYSE-listed issue, adding 2% to 53%. On Thursday, Ford's board authorized the purchase of up to The other major auto companies attracted strong buying. General Motors Corp. moved up 11/4 to 701/2. Chrysler Corp. added 11/4 to 441/4. issue, edging up 1/8 to 46%. Beatrice has agreed to be acquired by Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts &

Middle South Utilities was third, rising % to 10%. Among other actively traded utilities, Niagara Mohawk earned % to 20%, Commonwealth Edison fell % to 28% and Washington Water Power Co. rose 1/s to 231/2.
IBM, which traded just below its 52-weel high of 1384 early in the session on strong buying finished the day up only 4 to 136%. Cray Research, Thursday's biggest gainer, lost 1/4 to 641/2 as investors took profits. Semiconductor issues, strong Thursday, continued firm. Though Motorola eased ¼ to 34¼, Advanced Micro Devices added ¼ to 26 and exas Instruments rose 11/4 to 991/2.

Among other blue chips, American Telephone & Telegraph Co. lost ¼ to 22, Allied-Signal eased ¼ to 45%, Sears added ¼ to 36%, American Express retreated ¼ to 47%, General Electric Co. rose 1/8 to 641/8 and Exxon Corp. fell

Trade Issue Undermining Reagan's Republican Party

By LEONARD SILK

New York Times Service

EW YORK — The biggest economic threat to the Republicans in the 1986 congressional elections is likely to come from the huge U.S. trade deficit and the damage it is doing to many farms, factories and mines.

This week the Senate, defying threats of a presidential veto, passed legislation that would impose stringent quotas on the import of textiles and shoes.

The House had passed similar legislation earlier. But since the votes in both chambers fell short of the two-thirds majority required to override a veto, the odds are strong that President Ronald Reagan will be able to block protectionist legislation.

Nevertheless, this will not solve the political problem facing his party. Most Democrats are determined to exploit the trade issue, and the Republican administration can only parry their threat by dealing with the trade deficit. The need to do that accounts for the sharp turn it has made in held the dollar so high.

But, on Sept. 22, the administration, with Treasury Secretary James A. Baker 3d as point man, strongly supported by Paul A. Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, did an aboutface and accepted the view that an overvalued dollar was a major cause of the huge U.S. trade deficit, and that the dollar's value had to be brought down, especially against the yen.

The U-turn was marked by the agreement reached among the Group-of-Five major industrial countries at the Plaza Hotel in New York that the United States, Japan, West Germany, France and Britain should work together to achieve "some further orderly appreciation of the main non-dollar currencies against the dollar," as the communique on Sept. 22 stated.

However, the communique did not specify what the objectives of currency realignment should be or what rules for intervention 'should apply. To some, the agreement at the Plaza looked like an exercise in "ad-hocery," designed only to meet the immediate protectionist threat. Skeptics doubted that there had been any lasting change from the policy of letting exchange rates float, which allows currency markets to determine the dollar's value.

HIS WEEK, at a monetary conference in Washington, Richard A. Darman, deputy secretary of the Treasury, indicated that, as far as Secretary Baker and he were indicated that, as far as Secretary Baker and he were concerned, there would be a continuing effort to build on the monetary agreement reached by the Group of Five in New York.

Mr. Darman indicated support for publicly announced "target zones" for exchange rates among the major currencies. Specifically, he expressed interest in the proposal made by John Williamson, a senior fellow of the Washington-based Institute of International Economics for target zones of perhaps plus-or-minus 10 tional Economics, for target zones of perhaps plus-or-minus 10 percent, with "soft margins," rather than an absolute commit-iment to prevent rates from straying outside target zones. He suggested it was necessary to "abstract from history" in moving to a new monetary regime. Currency intervention alone could not bring about exchange-rate stability, he said, adding that "no monetary system could be expected to be stable if the fundamentals were out of line."

Those fundamentals include the determination of monetary. and fiscal policies, along with the structure of national tax systems, which can affect savings, investment and the flow of capital between nations. In its current negotiations with Japan, the United States is pressing for tax changes that would lessen capital outflows to this country.

But changes in fundamental national economic policies that affect the world monetary system, Mr. Darman said, would require changes in the international "political mechanism."

ITC Again Adjourns Imports, 4-Wheel Drives Meeting Threaten Market Share

Creditors, LME To Be Contacted

LONDON — Members of the International Tin Council adjourned their emergency meeting Friday after spending two days try-ing to solve the cash crisis that has duced global tin trading to a trickle.

Delegates said an eight-nation ITC working party would contact the council's creditors and the London Metal Exchange on Monday in a bid to clear hurdles blocking an overall solution before the full council meets again Wednesday. The party includes Malaysia, Indonesia, Thailand and Australia representing the producers and Japan, Finland, France and West Germany for the consumers. The delegates have been pondering terms of a £900-million ($1.28-billion) refinancing package proposed by the body's 16 creditors.

The LME, the largest tin market, halted tin dealings Oct. 24 when the ITC said it had ron out of cash to continue propping up prices in the glutted market. Trading remains suspended, as it does on the Kuala Lumpur market.

The creditors, which are owed £352 million, have made the cash offer conditional on guarantees from the central banks of the 22 producer and consumer countries that make up the ITC.

One of the creditors, Standard Chartered Bank, has offered a separate £552-million loan to help the ITC meet existing tin-purchase

Subaru Faces New Challenges in U.S.

By David Diamond

New York Times Service
PENNSAUKEN, New Jersey — For nearly 20 years, Subaru of America has thrived by doing things its way.

First, when Japanese cars were still a novelty in the United States, it brought in the Subaru, a car so much like a covered motorcycle in engine size and weight that it was exempted from federal auto safety and emission standards. Then, when Japanese cars began streaming into the United States, Subaru of America carved out a niche for itself in front-wheel and four-wheel drive, Subaru did all this while violating a basic tenet of the Japanese: Unlike every other organization set up here for the sole purpose of importing cars, Subaru is U.S.owned. It is the sole importer into the United States of cars made by Fuji Heavy Industries Ltd.

Now, however, Subaru is facing a variety of challenges. Perhaps most pressing is the influx of small cars from South Korea and Yugoslavia that will compete with Subaru. Ironically, it is Subaru's co-founder, Malcolm Bricklin - inventor of the ill-fated gull-winged Bricklin sports car in 1974—who is spearheading the invasion. Mr. Bricklin, who sold his Subaru stock during the early 1970s, is bringing $4,000 Yugos, front-wheel drive mini-cars, into the United States this year; he antici-pates importing 200,000 annually by 1987.

South Korea's $5,000 Hyundai, which was a hit in Canada last year, is due in the United States next year. Subaru is vulnerable to both, analysts Generally, Subaru's prices are at the lower end of the spectrum of Japanese cars," said Lloyd Kaney, an automotive analyst with Smith Barney. Subaru's market piche in front-wheel and fourwheel drive vehicles is also threatened. The frontwheel drive car, which Subaru introduced to the United States in 1970, has been widely adopted by other car makers. Last year Subaru sold half of the 101,542 four-wheel-drive passenger vehicles in the United States - a formidable share, but of a market that it once owned.

"Everyone is coming at their segment, and they're going to have to find ways to protect it," said Edward Lapham, marketing editor of Automotive News.

Subaru has begun to counterattack. It is planning to bring over its own minicar, the Justy, in 1987. The Justy will probably be priced between

At present, to get around import quotas, Toyota Motor Corp. Nissan Motor Co. and Honda Motor Co. are making cars in the United States that, industry analysts suggest, could satiate the U.S. craving for Japanese cars. Fuji is tempted in the same direction. Industry Output Was Flat in U.S. During October

WASHINGTON - U.S. industrial output showed no change in October following a small September decline, the Federal Reserve Board reported Friday. The report disappointed economists who had expected a sharp rise based on a gain in manufacturing jobs last

The report showed that production at manufacturing plants was unchanged in October following a 0.2-percent September decline and a 1-percent August increase.

By sector, manufacturing plants producing durable goods, items expected to last three or more years, suffered a 0.2-percent drop in output while plants producing nondurable goods recorded a slight 0.1-from a 6-percent drop in output on auto assembly lines. The annual rate of production fell to 7.6 million units, largely as the result of a brief strike at Chrysler Corp.

well, the report said. The sharp 0.9-percent jump in the Producer Price Index reflected the end of cut-rate automobile financing and a big gain in food prices, and came despite continued declines in gasoline prices, the La-bor Department said. However, despite the October gain — the largest since a 1-percent rise in April 1981 — the index for finished goods was still rising at a moderate 0.9-percent rate for the first 10 months of 1985. Wholesale goods overall had fallen 0.6 percent in September and 0.3 percent in August, with modest rises through the rest of the year. The department said food costs overall swelled 1.4 percent in October, after falling 0.9 percent in September and 0.7 percent in August. The bulk of the increase in wholesale prices was the result of sharply higher prices for the newly introduced 1986 model passenger cars, which climbed 5.1 percent, after falling in September and Au-

Factory and business equipment, which makes up 21 percent of the index, rose 1 percent, after falling 0.6 percent in September. That increase also was the result of the rise in motor-vehicle costs. Dorothea Otte, a Georgia State University economist, said the increase was "not unexpected." She said the overall price figures should drop back next month as car prices are figured lower in the index with seasonal adjustments. She also noted, however, that if car manufacturers continue to see sluggish sales on their new models "we may start to see another round of incentives, then we'll see prices drop again." Meanwhile, the Commerce Department said that the big drop in sales in September — the biggest since a 2.3-percent decline in June - came from a 1.6-percent fall at the wholesale level and a 1.3-percent decline in manufacturing sales. Sales had risen 1.9 percent in August.

With sales off, businesses were caught with unwanted inventories. Stockpiles on shelves and backlots rose by 0.2 percent in September.

With the decline in sales, the closely watched inventories-tosales ratio rose to 1.35 in September from 1.34 in August. That means it would take 1.35 months to deplete inventories at the September sales pace.

Beecham Talks To Pantry Pride

LONDON - Beecham Group PLC said Friday that it is holding talks with Pantry Pride Inc. over the possible acquisition of the Noreliff Thayer medicine and health product business of Pantry Pride's recently acquired subsidiary, Revlon Inc.

Beecham gave no financial de-tails, but industry sources estimated that Norcliff Thayer's value at about $400 million. Before Reviou yielded to the Pantry Pride takeover bid, it had agreed to sell Norcliff Thayer and other divisions to a New York investment house mak-

Fujitsu Planning New Computer for 1987 Shipment

TOKYO — Fujitsu Ltd. said Friday that it will begin shipments in 1987 of a new series of powerful, large-scale, general-purpose computers, including a model the company called faster than others of its type.

The new Facom M-780 series is to include six models with one to four central-processing units. The series' top model Fa-com M-780/40 will be able to process information twice as fast as International Business Machines Corp.'s mainframe model Sierra 400, a Fujitsu spokesman said. IBM introduced the Sierra series last February, and NEC Corp. and Hitachi Ltd. already have announced models that they say have faster operating speeds, computer industry analysts noted. Fujitsu said it will begin mar keting the series between March and September 1987 at monthly rental prices from 44 million yen ($215,000) to 181 million yen, depending on the model.

"Fujitsu wanted to bring out the Facom series now to convince its user base that they still have a good product and still mean to do business," said Karen Mavek, an industry analyst with Jardine Fleming (Securities) Ltd. in Tokyo.

Fed Warns About Excess Bank Dividends

By Nathaniel C. Nash

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve Board has issued a policy statement warning U.S. banks and bank holding companies that are experiencing financial trouble that they should reduce their dividends or not pay them at all.

Concerned about the strength of capital in the banking industry and the pressure from Wall Street on banks to keep dividends at ever-growing levels, the Fed suggested in its statement Thursday that prudent banking practices include withholding dividends to protect the financial soundness of banks and their holding companies. The central bank's action came one week after the office of the Comptroller of the Currency issued

It is unclear what role Subaru would play if Fuji wanted to change its strategy.

There are other problems Subaru could face. A move toward protectionism could burden the company with everything from new trade restrictions to import surtaxes and local content requirements. And if the ven continues to rise, the company would likely have to charge more for its cars.

For now, however, Subaru of America is riding high. The company, which was founded with ,000 in 1967 and went public in 1968, has set sales and earnings records in each of the last nine years, despite the fact that its unit sales volume was frozen in 1981 by the Japanese.

Results for its fiscal year ended Oct. 31 are not yet available, but Mr. Kanev estimates that Subaru earned $75 million on sales of $1.3 billion, up from $60 million on $1 billion. The company was the inspira-tion of Mr. Bricklin, who went to ecutives to let him import their car. It was a time when fewer than 10 percent of autos on U.S. highways were built overseas, and the Japanese were readier to yield control. The first Subaru reached the Kanev's projections, Subaru will United States in May 1968. At earn $450 a car after taxes.

Nor did its 22-horsepower engine have to satisfy federal emission standards. Subaru sold 7,000 cars before Consumer Reports, rating automotive safety, called them "unacceptable."

Dealers demanded a new model. and in 1970 Subaru developed the bigger FF 1 — the first front-wheel drive passenger car to hit the United States. The FF 1, handy for driving in mountains and snow, set Subaru in a new direction. In 1975 the company introduced station wagons with four-wheel drive.

In 1981, Japan agreed to limit the number of cars it sent to the U.S. market; the quotas were re-laxed only last April when Japan's Ministry of International Trade and Industry permitted the export of an additional 40,000 Subarus, In those four years. Herald,

For the executive who likes to travel light...

The desk diary that's not desk-bound

The new IHT desk diary has as much noting space as most standard desk diaries, but condensed into a highly compact portable format. Bound in luxurious silk-grain black leather, the desk diary weighs in at just 340 grams (12 oz.) and measures 22 X 15 cm (8.5 X 6 in.). No space is wasted on unnecessary maps, bulky economic data, voluminous demographic statistics—yet it has all the space you need for noting appointments. A removable address book, incorporated into the back cover, saves you hours of re-writing each year. No need to pack a cumbersome, awkward volume when you travel --- yet you won't need to leave behind one of your critical business tools.

The diary will fit easily into the slimmest attaché case. And its gilt-metal corners, gold page-edges, and French blue paper make it both practical and elegant.

Personalized with gilt initials on the cover, this is the ideal desk diary for the executive on the move. The perfect gift for friends, business contacts and associates. Order today. (And please note that quantity discounts are available.)

tion in non-Western cultures as well - there is an interesting account of attempts to kill the Buddha, for example. And while he tends to dwell longest on the most celebrated episodes, on such figures as Julius Caesar, Thomas a Becket and Abraham Lincoln, he also explores less familiar territory. Taken primarily as a narrative, "Political Murder" makes rewarding reading. Individual incidents

 Orsini's attempt on Napoleon III, for instance are skillfully reconstructed; the motives of a variety of assassins and the effects of their actions are carefully weighed; there are succinct accounts of some of the more noteworthy movements that have been committed to killing their opponents, including the original assassins, the heretical Islamic sect of "Hashishiyyin."

The principal question the book poses is whether assassination is "good politics by either ethical or pragmatic standards." At the end of the inquiry Ford comes out and says that with a few exceptions, the answer is "no." but it is clear which way the wind is blowing as early as his chapter on the ancient Greeks, where he discusses the case of Harmodius and Aristogiton. These two friends were honored by the Greeks for slaying the tyrant (or purported tyrant) Hipparchus — they were reputedly the first mortals to have statues made of them, an honor previously reserved for gods. But both Thucydides and Aristotle took a cool view of the motives for the killing, and while Aristotle conceded that there could be such a thing as justifiable tyrannicide, he warned against the dangers of what Ford calls "pseudo-tyrannicide."

Ford also tries to trace the "peaks and valleys in the frequency curve for political murder." There have been several notable periods of remission, be argues, distinguished in their outlook by "a certain quality of balance, as between authority and forebearance" - most recently, the later 17th century and the 18th century until its final decade.

While it is possible to disagree about defining the boundaries of these periods and about their significance, what can hardly be disputed is that the last 30 years have seen a brutal increase in the number of major assassinations and assassination attempts. There have also been developments for which the past offers little guidance, the use made by terrorists of highly sophisticated technology, for example, and the growth of a "terrorist international."

Ford acknowledges that when he comes to deal with recent times he is also frequently dealing with unprecedented situations. But the same lessons apply, and he brings the same balanced judgment to contemporary disorders that he does to those of earlier epochs. He has written a thoughtful book, and that descripts to be approximately appropriate. one that deserves to be carefully pondered.

Seahawks and Patriots Head Down Memory Lane

By Michael Janofsky New York Times Service

NEW YORK — How about this for irony: In the third game of the 1984 National Football League season, the New England Patriots were losing to the Seattle Seahawks, 23-0, in the second quarter when Tony Eason replaced Steve Grogan at quarterback. Ea-son ran for one touchdown and passed for two others, leading the Patriots to the greatest comeback in their history, a 38-23 victory that established Eason as the starter and moved Grogan to the sideline for the rest of

> Now, 24 regular-season games later, both the Patriots (7-3) and the Scahawks (6-4) are driving for divisional titles in the American Conference, and guess who the Patriots expect to start at quarterback when they engage the Seahawks Sunday in Seattle? It's not Eason.

"That was just one of those things that you can't necessarily explain because if you did, it would linger in the back of your mind and affect your performance," said John Harris, the Scahawk free safety, recalling last season's game. "I wouldn't think a lot of guys have been thinking this week about what happened in that game, that if we go up on them it would happen again. I don't think that's on anybody's mind."

History bears him out, in that Seattle won 10 games after its experience in New England to finish at 12-4. For this meeting, the circumstances are somewhat different and, because it comes much later in the season, far more critical for both teams. The Patriots are tied with the New York Jets for the lead in the East; the Seahawks are tied with the Los Angeles Raiders, a game behind Denver in the West.

No player deserves more credit for New England's position in the standings than Grogan, who replaced Eason in this year's sixth game and began the Patriots on their current five-game winning streak. He has completed 67 of 125 passes (53 per cent) for 1,068 yards and five touchdowns; just five of his passes have been intercepted. That's enough to worry the Seahawks, whose defense this season has not been especially outstanding.

"If you know Grogan's history, you know he's a very good quarterback," Harris said. "Plus, now they have speed everywhere, with Irving Fryar playing well, and Craig James is much improved runner from last year. The

As if they don't have enough probably that includes a 30-13 victory by the Dolphins needs every victory it can get these days.

> Pittsburgh Steelers (5-5) at Houston Oilers (4-6) — In beating three mediocre teams in the last four weeks, the Steelers have shown an ability to do enough to win. Just when it appeared the Oilers were making a move, they were shut out by Buffalo, 20-0.

San Diego Chargers (5-5) at Denver Bron-cos (7-3) — The Chargers stunned the Bron-cos two weeks ago, 30-10, and with another victory they can climb into playoff conten-tion. It all depends on how Denver's defense handles quarterback Dan Fouts and his merry band of receivers. Last Monday night, that defense played remarkably well in a 17-16 victory over San Francisco, clamping down hard when the 49ers moved inside the 10-yard line. (Boncos by 41/4).

NATIONAL CONFERENCE New York Glants (7-3) at Washington Redskins (5-5) — The Giants beat the Redskins, 17-3, four games ago, and it's safe to assume they can win again, Washington has not beaten a team that now has a winning record. With tackle Joe Jacoby injured, its line is not doing Joe Theismann justice, and teams with strong defensive lines (like the Giants') have had no trouble controlling John Riggins, George Rogers or any other Redskin runner. (Redskins by 1.)

der, and if he can't play or can play only with restricted use of his throwing arm, Chicago is in danger of losing its first game. Dallas is among the few teams that can handle an outstanding running game. While both Wal-ter Payton and Matt Subey ran for more than 100 yards last Sunday against Detroit, the Cowboys have held opposing teams to under 100 yards six times this season. The Cowboys need a victory more than the Bears because they are tied with the Giants at the top of the division (Even.)

Los Angeles Rams (8-2) at Atlanta Falcons (1-9) — With or without Dieter Brock at lems, the Falcons will play without right Buffalo Bills (2-8) at Cleveland Browns (4- in the second week of 1985. Don't expect a tackle Brett Miller, who severely sprained an 6) — The Browns have lost their last four, change. Indianapolis had problems on both ankle in Sunday's overtime loss to Philadelphia (Rams by 64.)

Minnesota Vikings (5-5) at Detroit Lions (5-5) — Here are two teams about as exciting as their records. Both have been up and down all season, winning and losing in all sorts of ways. The Vikings won their previous meeting, 16-13, on a field goal with no time left. (Lions by 3.)

New Orleans Saints (3-7) vs. Green Bay Packers (4-6) at Milwaukee — In a tacit way, Coach Burn Phillips gave his win-one-forthe-Burnmer speech earlier this week, saying that if the Saints didn't nick up five victories. that if the Saints didn't pick up five victories, he should be replaced. Well, they better plan on finishing with a five-game winning streak, because the Packers aren't likely to lose. Green Bay has shown itself the more resourceful of the two clubs, and Phillips has named Bobby Hebert, the former United States Football League quarterback, to make his first NFL start. (Packers by 7.)

St. Louis Cardinals (4-6) at Philadelphia Eagles (5-5) — The Cardinals were so pumped up over beating Dallas two weeks ago that they then went out and lost to Tampa Bay, 16-0. The Eagles, on the other hand won so rousingly Sanday over Additional Cardinals. hand, won so rousingly Sunday over Atlanta —on a 99-yard pass play in overtime —that they're thinking about the playoffs. That's a lot of emotion, and with victories in four of their last five games (compared to the Cardinals' recent 1-5 record), the Eagles stand a better chance to win. (Cardinals by 1½.)

INTERCONFERENCE Kansas City Chiefs (3-7) at San Francisco 49ers (5-5) — Minus the snowball thrown at the 49ers as they attempted a field goal Monday night, San Francisco might have beaten Denver. The 49ers have slipped this season, but not so much that they can't handle the Chiefs, who have lost their last six games. (49ers by 13.)

Tampa Bay Buccaneers (1-9) at New York

Jets (7-3) — If the injury-riddled Jets go into this game with a limited number of defensive backs, it's possible the Buccaneers could steal a victory. Winging Farewell to a Goalie Gone

PHILADELPHIA - in the first rematch of last season's Stanley Cup finalists, the challenge to the Philadelphia Flyers was not to avenge having lost to the Edmonton Oilers. It was simply to play hockey — to get on with living in their first game since the death of goalie Pelle

Lindbergh.
The Oilers had offered to posipone Thursday night's game, but Philadelphia chose to play.

The contest at the Spectrum followed a memorial ceremony for Lindbergh, who died Tues-day as the result of a car crash. The Flyers won, 5-3 - a chubrecord 11th straight victory — while wearing Lindbergh's No. 31 on their shoulders. The Oilers wore black armbands.

Lindbergh had been left brain dead after his car crashed into a concrete wall in front of an elementary school in Somerdale, New Jersey, early Sunday morning. After his parents had given permission to donate his organs for transplants, he was removed from life-support systems Tues-

It had been a week of upheaval for the Flyers. Lindbergh was found to have a .24 alcohol count in his blood; a motorist with a measure of .10 is considered in-toxicated under New Jersey law. And that caused the Flyers to become introspective about the role of alcohol in their lives and the game they play.

"This is not a drinking team," said Brad Marsh. "And Pelle was by no means a drinker. He liked to drive fast. He was a happy person. But he was not a drinker. But I think we've all done what he did. And now, I don't think we'll ever do it again."

Outside the Spectrum Thursday night, the U.S. flag and that of Lindbergh's native Sweden were at half-mast. Inside the darkened arena, a wreath of flowers was placed at center ice and the capacity crowd had stood silently. The Flyers, heads during a 23-minute service that included words from Bernie Par-eat, Lindbergh's childhood idol and goaltending coach. "A goalie stands on a very lonely island," Parent said. Pelle Lindbergh had become without question one of the greatest goalies. When death defeats greatness, we all mourn.

Pelle Lindbergh, during the 1985 Stanley Cup finals.

When death defeats youth, we mourn all the more." Lindbergh, 26 and an all-star, was the winner of the Vezina Trophy last season as the best goaltender in the league.

"The big question was how we would react," said the Flyer captain, Dave Poulin. "Nobody knew. But we knew we had to respond....

When the opening was dropped, Philadelphia played hard. "These players have grieved all week," said the Flyer coach, Mike Keenan. "Winning bowed, were on their blue line or losing was not the factor. It was the way they played the game - their intensity.

The Flyers incurred the game's first penalty. They scored its first gered. goal. Each time the high-scoring Oilers challenged, they pulled away from the defending champions. Rich Sutter scored the winning goal at 11:04 of the final period. It was one of Philadelphia's three third-period goals. The Flyers won with a goalie who had played in only one NHL game. When Bob Froese, Lindbergh's successor, was in-jured in a Wednesday practice, the club recalled Darren Jensen from its American Hockey eague affiliate. Jensen turned back 29 of 32 shots. Said Sutter of the emotion-charged victory: "We are profes-sionals. We have to carry on. We couldn't let this game slip away. Deep in everybody's hearts was the will to win this one for Pelle and his family. Our job was to take pride in that."

In the Flyer dressing room, the sadness of the last five days lin-

As the players peeled off their working clothes, Lindbergh's father, Sigge, slowly walked past the lockers, gently shaking hands with each of his son's teammates, thanking them. (UPI, AP, NYT)

"It is terribly hard for even the best athletes to get in here," said Jim Railton, secretary of Oxford's sports committee (he is also the rowing consultant and correspondent for The Times of London). "If Carl Lewis came here with his four Olympic gold medals, he probably couldn't get in."

London's press virtually ignore sports at Oxford and Cambridge.

"The boat race is the only event that means anything," said Adrian Brown, deputy sports editor of The Daily Mirror. The boat race, a visiting reporter was supposed to know, is the one every spring between Oxford and Cambridge.

Bruins and Capitals Swap Goaltenders BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Bruins traded Pete Peeters, who won the 1983 Vezina Trophy as the National Hockey League's top goaltender, to the Washington Capitals for goalie Pat Riggin, the Bruins announced Thursday night. Both Peeters, 28, and Rigging, 26, are in their fourth

Peeters came to the Bruins in June 1982 from Philadelphia in exchange for Brad McCrimmon. In eight games this season, he allowed 31 goals for a 3.84 goals-against average and a 3-4-1 record. Last season, Riggin set a team record with 28 victories, while recording the second-best goals-against average in the NHL, 2.98. In the 1982-83 season he had a club-record 13-game unbeaten streak, including 10 straight victories. This year he has allowed 23 goals and has a 3.74 average

Pavin Leads by Stroke in Kapalua Golf

KAPALUA, Hawaii (AP) — Corey Pavin had two eagles in a round of 66 that propelled him into a one-stroke lead after Thursday's second round of the Kapahua International golf tournament.

Pavin's midway total is 133, 11 shots under par, while a second straight 67 left David Ishii at 134. Masters champion Bernhard Langer of West Germany and Andy Bean were at 135 after matching 68s. First-round leader Sandy Lyle shot a 70/136.

For the Record

Darryl Sutter, captain of the Chicago Black Hawks, underwent surgery Thursday on his separated right shoulder and will be out of action for at least two months. Sutter suffered the injury Wednesday night in a 6-4

National Hockey League victory over Quebec. Relief pitcher Rollie Fingers, a former Cy Young Award winner, was released Thursday by the Milwankee Brewers, who this season finished next to last in the American League East. Fingers, who holds the majorleague record of 341 saves, had a 5.04 earned-run average and 17 saves in

Doon: India's Harrow by the Himalayas

DEHRA DUN, India — The By Steven R. Weisman "old boys" will probably talk about it for years. Amid revelry, nostalgia and choruses of "Auld Lang Syne," the alumni of one of the country's most exclusive boarding schools came back to their campus in the Himalayan foothills early in November to toast themselves and their ascendancy in India. The Doon School, their alma mater, had much to celebrate 50 years after its founding by British educators as an Indian version of Eton or Harrow. The "old boys" were proud, for instance, that among their number was Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, wearing his blue school blazer and tie, plus several fellow members of the "Doon School mafia" who joined his government. In abundance, too, were the executives of scores of India's leading businesses and editors of its publica-

In a speech before 3,000 guests at the jubilee, Gandhi, class of 1960, said returning to the ivy halls and playing fields of his youth had "always been like com-ing back home." The Doon School, he said. "has given us a certain strength to face the

"It is unques-tionably India's leading school and a breeding ground for the movers and shakers (and reapers) of Indian society," wrote Mala-vika Sanghvi, a chronicler of Indian mores, in Imprint magazine.

Doon School people are sensi-tive to criticism that they are sharpening the worst tendencies in a country long burdened by caste and social hierarchies. "We are not an elite in the conniving sense," asserted Ajit Narain Haksar, a retired chairman of ITC Ltd., a conglomerate. "Merit is still the basic criterion."

A system of student prefects and captains enforces discipline, sometimes cruelly. "They're still training people in 19th-century British values," said Dinesh Mohan, a classmate of Gandhi who is now a biology professor in New Delhi. "They pride themselves on upper-class things, like quaint hobbies and politics based on class, but there have been no graduates of national stature in science, or literary achievement in Hindi."

A more typical comment came from Bawa Amarjovt Singh, a 29year-old garment exporter. "You leave here with a feeling of selfconfidence and determination. Whether we're actually brighter than the next fellow, I don't know. But normally, we get what

Students and graduates generally reject the charge that the Doon School is too Westernized. From its inception, they note, the school made the singing of Hindi and Urdu songs a part of each day's activities. Students are taught to appreciate classic Indian theater and music.

There were countless stories at . the reunion of boyhood pranks, awful food, cold showers and getting lost on hikes, but little on the stimulation of the classroom. Grown men laughed and called each other Roly-Poly, Dinky and other old nicknames. Their wives looked forlorn and irrelevant, like their counterparts at reunions at Harvard or Yale.

At a meeting of the "old boys" in a school amphitheater, there were also familiar demands that the school give greater preference for admissions to the sons of alumni. Politely but firmly, Ramchandani, the headmaster, said no. Then an older alumnus rose and proposed that the graduates get together and come up with "a Doon School plan for the nation" to help their classmate and prime minister. The place erupted with eers, boos and laughter.

But there was also a dramatic moment for Izzat Rai Dewan, 58, a tobacco company executive who in 1947, a few years after his graduation, was captured in Cashmir when war erupted with Pakistan. Stripped of his clothes and shivering in his undershorts, Dewan was convinced that he and his brother and father were going to be executed by Pakistani soldiers. Then a Pakistani Army major, Barekara Mali Khan, recognized him as a Doon School chum and freed them.

Under a spreading neem tree in the pale afternoon sunshine, the two men were reunited for the first time in 38 years. They hugged each other in a long silent. embrace. Then they burst into
